

Changes to Companies House filing fees.

What's happening?

From Wednesday 1st May 2024 the revised Companies House filing fees will come into effect.

Why is it happening?

Following The Economic Crime and Corporate Transparency Act 2023 which allows Companies House increased powers to ensure accuracy, verify the identity of a wide range of individuals, remove fraudulent organisations and disclose information to criminal investigation agencies, the increased fees will be used to ensure accuracy of data, tackle economic crime and implement new technologies. With variances in paper and online submission fee prices they look to steer companies to digitally submit their information where possible in a bid to reduce errors, streamline operations.

Who it affects

- Private limited companies
- Public limited companies
- Limited liability partnerships
- Overseas companies
- Limited partnerships
- Scottish qualifying partnerships
- Overseas entities

The increased fees are across various services including, incorporation, change of name, confirmation statements and re-registration.

What does it mean for me?

You need to be aware of the changes and how they will affect you. You need to consider the financial implications of the revised fees and adopt the new filing requirements in order to stay compliant.
